In recent years, climate change has intensified the frequency and severity of extreme weather events worldwide. Heatwaves, floods, and hurricanes are becoming more destructive, disrupting communities and economies on a massive scale. According to recent reports, global temperatures in 2024 reached record highs, prompting urgent calls for stronger environmental policies. Scientists argue that human activity, particularly the burning of fossil fuels, is the primary driver of these changes. Governments and organizations are now under increasing pressure to implement sustainable solutions, ranging from renewable energy investments to stricter emissions regulations. While progress is visible in some regions, the pace of global action remains slow, raising questions about accountability and the collective responsibility of nations in combating the climate crisis.
