A Poorly written Executive Summary:

The impact of social media on job search processes. Social media is very popular nowadays, with platforms like Facebook, Twitter, and LinkedIn being used by millions of people around the world. I personally like Twitter as it is best to express your views. It tells how job seekers can use these platforms to network and find job opportunities. Additionally, it discusses why we need to maintain a professional online presence, as employers often look at candidates' social media profiles during the hiring process and they decide based on that. For example, my friend was hired because of her attractive LinkedIn profile. The report includes several case studies of individuals who successfully found jobs through social media. It also covers the possible risks of using social media in job searches, such as privacy and finding unprofessional content like a picture on the beach. The report concludes with recommendations.
